Plot Summary

The play is set in New York City in the 1950s. Police officer Steve McLeod is a rising star in the NYPD. He is ambitious, driven, and determined to make a name for himself. However, McLeod's ambition soon leads him down a dangerous path.

McLeod begins taking bribes from criminals and using his position to protect their interests. He justifies his actions by telling himself that he is only doing what is necessary to get ahead in the corrupt world of the NYPD. However, McLeod's corruption soon begins to take a toll on his personal life. He becomes increasingly isolated and paranoid, and he begins to lose the respect of his colleagues.

One day, McLeod is involved in a shooting that leaves an unarmed black man dead. The incident is ruled a justifiable homicide, but McLeod knows that he used excessive force. McLeod's guilt and shame over the incident lead him to a breakdown. He realizes that he has become the very thing that he despised: a corrupt cop.

McLeod is eventually arrested and charged with corruption and murder. He is convicted and sentenced to prison. In prison, McLeod has time to reflect on his life and the choices he made. He comes to understand the true meaning of justice and the importance of integrity.
